Guidelines on Acupuncture and Moxibustion Intervention for COVID-19 (second edition)

COVID-19 is an acute respiratory infectious disease, which is highly infectious and commonly susceptible, and poses a serious threat to people's life and health. It has been included in the infectious diseases of class B prescribed in the Law of the People's Republic of China on Prevention and Treatment of Infectious Diseases, and is managed according to class A infectious diseases.

COVID-19 belongs to the category of "epidemic" disease in traditional Chinese medicine. For thousands of years, traditional Chinese medicine has accumulated rich experience in the long-term medical practice of fighting against epidemics. As an important part of traditional Chinese medicine, acupuncture-moxibustion has its own distinctive characteristics and unique advantages, and has made important contributions in the history of anti-epidemic in China. There are related records of acupuncture and moxibustion for epidemic prevention and treatment in classical literatures of TCM. For example, Sun Simiao, doctor in the Tang dynasty, put forward in his book Beiji Qianjin Yao Fang (Prescription Worth a Thousand in Gold for Every Emergency), "Those who travel to infectious disease areas often need moxibustion and form purulent moxibustion, so they will not be infected by malaria and warm malaria." In Compendium of Materia Medica, Li shizhen, physician in the Ming dynasty, elaborated, "Artemisia argyi... Moxibustion can smooth the meridian patency, cure hundreds of diseases, and recure people who suffer from long-term illness." These two books both record that acupuncture can prevent and treat infectious diseases. Modern clinical and experimental studies show that acupuncture-moxibustion can regulate the human immune function, and act on anti-inflammatory and anti-infection. Acupuncture-moxibustion plays an active role in the prevention and treatment of infectious diseases. In the face of COVID-19, Chinese acupuncture and moxibustion therapy has actively participated in prevention and control, and achieved good results. With further understanding of COVID-19 and accumulation of clinical experience in acupuncture and moxibustion therapy, according to Diagnosis and Treatment Plan for COVID-19 (trial version sixth) and Suggestions on TCM rehabilitation during convalescence of COVID-19 (trial version) issued by the General Office of National Health Commission and the General Office of National Administration of Traditional Chinese Medicine, we formed Guidelines on Acupuncture and Moxibustion Intervention for COVID-19 (second edition) for medical workers in acupuncture implementation and guidance of patients at home.

I. Principles of Acupuncture Intervention

i. During the epidemic, acupuncture intervention work should be subordinated to the overall situation and carried out methodically under the guidance of medical institutions at all levels. During acupuncture treatment, work should be strictly implemented in accordance with the requirements of quarantine and disinfection. Acupuncture treatment for confirmed and recovering cases, several patients can be treated in the same room; while for suspected cases, different patients should be treated in separate rooms. During respiratory-support oxygen therapy, moxibustion can be used under safe conditions.

ii. The clinical diagnosis, staging, classification, and syndrome differentiation of TCM for COVID-19 shall follow the COVID-19 diagnosis and treatment plan issued by the General Office of the National Health Commission and the General Office of the National Administration of Traditional Chinese Medicine. At the same time, the characteristics of acupuncture should be fully considered to make the acupuncture intervention more pertinent. COVID-19 is one of the "five epidemics" and is generally susceptible. "all are easy to be infected, regardless of age, and the symptoms are similar." The epidemic came into human body through mouth and nose, and most of them invade the lung first, then the spleen, stomach, and large intestine, and the lesions were relatively mild; a small proportion of them pass to the pericardium, liver, and kidney, and became critically ill. The disease changes rapidly and has a clear core pathogenesis and syndrome evolution. Acupuncture will stimulate the acupoints on the limbs through the meridian internal viscera and outer collateral branches, and directly smash the nidus to stimulate and strengthen the viscera and its Qi, so that the invading evil of epidemics can be separated and expelled. Acupuncture is also to stimulate the Qi while improving self-protection of the viscera, and to reduce the damage of the organs caused by the epidemic.

iii. The acupuncture intervention, according to the evolution of the pathogenesis, will be divided into three phases - medical observation phase, clinical treatment phase, and convalescence phase. Through the differentiation of the syndromes of organs and meridians, the treatment will mainly apply on main acupoints matching with other acupoints according to clinical symptoms, with respect of the principle of “less is more”. Acupuncture and moxibustion operation will be selected as appropriate according to the specific conditions, following the principle of convenient, simple, safe and effective. We shall create suitable conditions and strive to play the role of acupuncture in all clinical stages. Acupuncture can be used together with herbal medicine in the clinical treatment phase to play the synergy role of acupuncture. Treatment of the recovering patients should give full play the core role of acupuncture. We recommended to establish new acupuncture-based rehabilitation clinics for COVID-19.

iv. The choice of acupoints and methods draws on the evidence from ancient literatures, modern clinical and basic researches, and incorporates acupuncture research results shown in previous studies of improving lung function, regulating innate immunity, anti-inflammatory and pro-inflammatory factors, activating the vagal-cholinergic anti-inflammatory pathway and regulating the respiratory system and overcoming the damage of lung inflammation.

v. Under the guidance of acupuncture professionals, patients should be encouraged to carry out moxibustion, acupoint application, acupoint
